Tilly is a good kid. But sometimes she had a terrible tantrum(要脾气) before. For example, she lay on the floor, kicked her legs, waved her arms about and screamed. Then, her mother said animals in Africa could hear her.

One day Tilly's cousin Ben came to stay(做客). Tilly and her brother were teaching him to play dodgeball(躲球游戏). "You must run," said Tilly. "If the ball hits your leg, you will be out!"

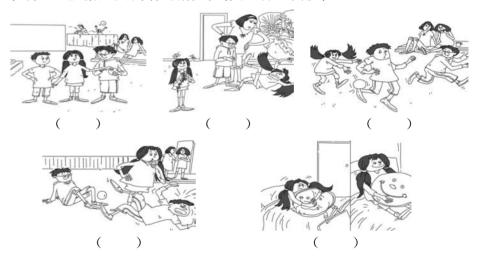

Ben got hit on the leg with the ball. "You are out!" called Tilly. Ben liked winning, so he didn't want to go out. "I didn't feel the ball hit me," he said. Ben's mum shouted, "You are out, Ben! That is the game!"

Then a terrible thing happened. Ben had a tantrum! Tilly had never seen a tantrum before. Ben looked awful. Tilly didn't like it at all. "If that is a tantrum," said Tilly, "I won't have one any more."

Now Tilly has a big yellow pillow with a smiling face. When she feels a tantrum coming, she squeezes(捏) the pillow. The pillow is always smiling, and that makes Tilly smile too!

Clare is 15 and she lives in Leeds, in the north of England. It's Saturday and Clare is shopping. She wants to get in touch with her friend, Jamie, so she takes out her mobile phone. But she doesn't phone him. She sends him a message. This is what Clare sends:

To keep in touch with their friends, British people often use text-messaging, because it's quick, easy and short. There are some examples of how text messages make language shorter. For example, pls means please, and thx means thanks, etc.

Of course, this kind of writing is only for text-messaging. Clare and her friends don't write like this when they are doing schoolwork or writing letters.

In Britain, about 8 million students use mobile phones. This number is growing. At school there can be problems with ringing and students sending text messages in class.

Most schools have a rule that students must turn off their mobiles in class—they can only use them after school.

If a student's phone rings in class, the teacher can take it away. Most students think they should be able to bring their phones to school. Clare says, "There is no reason to keep the phone away. It is useful." 任务一:阅读短文,选择正确的答案,将其字母标号填入题前括号里。

- 11. Where may Clare be when she sends the message to Jamie?
 - A. She may be at school.
- B. She may be at home.
- C. She may be in the supermarket.

- ()2. How many students use mobile phones in Britain?
 - A. About six million.
- B. About seven million.
- C. About eight million.
- ()3. Most schools don't allow(允许) students to use their phones in class. Does Clare think this school rule is right?
 - A. No, she doesn't.

B. Yes, she does.

C. We don't know.

任务二:根据下面的密码,请"破译"一下 Clare 的短信,将短信内容写在横线上。

ruok?	=	Are you OK?	gr8	=	great
pls	=	please	thx	=	thanks

Sara: See you later.

Long long ago, there was no phone. If you wanted to talk with someone that was far away, you had to walk for a long time to his house. Mr Bell invented the telephone, so you can make a phone call when you want to say something to your family, your friends or others. It's really easy. When you get a cold, and you can't go to school, you can just make a phone call to your teacher. And the teacher doesn't need to go to your house to see you. That is nice.
